More dancers attend shortened event

By Lauren Fitz

Reporter

In the University's 21st year of participating in Dance Marathon, the main ZiggyThon event went from 32 hours to 24 hours long as a way to encourage more people to sign up to dance.

Austin Flores, director of Dance Marathon this year, said there was a definite increase in signups since the number of hours to dance was decreased.

"We saw an increase of about 105 dancers. I think that they'll be happy to see the total at the end," Flores said.

Flores said there were about 410 dancers and 150 leadership team members, which put them at 560 participants. There were also 150 bikers and Flores said that there were an estimated 1,500 people at the closing ceremony.

Hazardous weather and road conditions prevented the bikers from riding the last stretch to the University. The bikers still made it to Bowling Green by bus and biked through the city to the Perry Field House to participate in the closing ceremony, where it was revealed that the participants had raised $452,251.41 throughout the total fundraising period, an increase from the $341,749.34 raised during Dance Marathon in 2015.

When it came to signing up earlier versus later, Flores said there were definitely more early sign ups than later sign ups.

"We had a lot of early signups. I think that we had some good fundraising pushes at the end to get people qualified to be able to dance, but it's been mostly throughout the year. There's always a push in second semester," Flores said.

When it comes to the dancers, many of them said it wouldn't have mattered how many hours they were dancing as long as they were doing something to help the kids this year.

Sophomore Emily Legan, who was a dancer last year, said the change in hours didn't affect her decision to sign up again this year.

"It didn't make any bit of a difference to me," Legan said. "It was all for the kids. It

Experiences in cybercommunication

I first got online when I moved to Germany in 2004. I immediately began cyber-mediated relationships with my earliest friends via AIM chat.

Funnily, this is right around the time it started to be passé!

In 2005 I would discover MySpace and 2006, Facebook; both of these social media sites skyrocketed in user numbers over the course of a very short time.

It wasn't until the very end of 2006, as I entered high school, that I would discover the power of text.

From my very first instant messages, it was hook, line and sinker. I attribute much of my closest relationships and social successes to instant messaging.

My closest friendships were all maintained via instant messaging, and this is true to this day. It is where I feel the most comfortable for self-disclosure, especially if it is the first time with some particular friends. I could have the benefits of both stream-of-conscious conversations with the deliberation and contemplative nature of formal writing.

With the people I am really attracted to (platonic and romantic), it allows for us to complete thoughts simultaneously. As a person won't forget her thoughts in the blink of an eye, this can be very advantageous.

Tabitha Holowka
Columnist

Sadly, my face-to-face relationships have always suffered, and I cannot say, beyond a shadow of a doubt, that my preference for online communication is faultless; though it would certainly not be the sole perpetrator.

I am rather averse to addressing conflict face-to-face. However, this most likely is not an issue I alone face. It may simply come down to how you read it.

AIM came to me at a time in my life when I had been facing trauma after trauma and it was extremely difficult for me to talk to people face-to-face. I credit cyberspace for providing a way to still make connections with people, despite the thoughts that maybe I could have gotten better with face-to-face over time without instant-messaging as a crutch.

Today, I agonize about whether I am capable of having a romantic relationship with someone that I would see all the time; my partner and I have been long distance from the start. Every single other important relationship, past and present, has had geographical barriers that are only breached by cybercommunication. Do I subconsciously do this on purpose?

Still, I think I always come to the conclusion that the degrees to which I utilize instant-messaging and face-to-face communication both have more to do with simple social preferences, and not something to be overcome. I am a voraciously independent person, depending on my solitude at times, and my communication habits reflect that, and are probably not some deep-seated misappropriation of either.

Cybercommunication is a rich supplement to our needs for socialness. People often scapegoat others' phone usage for whatever social ailment they are lamenting that day. There is as much to be embraced as there is of which to be wary.

Service work abounds, suggestions

In light of the Dance Marathon event this past weekend, service and helping others have been on most of our minds. As a campus, we have many opportunities offered to us that we can utilize to make a difference. Whether you prefer to stay on or off campus, the city of Bowling Green has many amazing opportunities for us to take advantage of.

On-campus, there are many organizations and events you can take part in. Some easy ideas to begin serving the community are participating in Friday Night Lights, volunteering for the Aruna 5k or other such walks/runs or even just signing up for the Office of Service Learning's service newsletter so you can stay in the know about service events both on and off campus.

If Greek organizations interest you, most social and professional chapters have their own philanthropies and events that they serve in. These chapters have philanthropies that raise money for people with disabilities, Alzheimer's, autism, domestic abuse, arthritis and many more. Panhellenic Council as a whole also supports the Circle of Sisterhood, a charity that helps build schools for girls in impoverished communities. The University also has two service specific chapters,

Disney about more than magic

I first heard about the Disney College Program in high school during the summer of 2010 at band camp. The halls of the residence building at Grove City College where the band girls stayed were lined with leftover posters from the spring semester. The purple DCP posters caught my eye. I was always known as the “Disney Girl” among friends, frequently spouting off obscure facts about the movies and parks, and I knew this opportunity would be one that I wanted to pursue when I finally got to college.

Around the same time the next year, I moved into Kreischer Hall and hung the poster I had taken during band camp up on the wall above my bed. I wrongly assumed that my base knowledge on Disney trivia would be enough to score me a “role.” Make no mistake, the DCP is much more competitive than that. The program, which began in 1981, accepts up to 12,000 students annually from over 50,000 applicants. These students are from all majors, all over the United States. More students come from the Disney International Program and the Culinary Program.

After applying three times and being waitlisted, or “pending,” twice, I went on to participate in the DCP during the spring semester of 2013 for Quick Service Food and Beverage, and was recently accepted for a second program in Photopass during the fall of 2016.

On paper, the Disney College Program is an opportunity to work from four to seven months during the fall or spring semesters at either the Walt Disney World or Disneyland Resorts. The DCP is made up of three components: living, learning and earning.

The “living” component includes not only staying in company-owned housing with participants from around the world, but also events including a formal dance, movie nights, talent shows and a “graduation” ceremony for each semester.

The DCP offers classes that are recommended for three credit hours each by the American Council of Education. The University will count the DCP and the classes offered for up to one credit hour of an elective, depending on your major, when you register it as Co-op 50. In addition, seminars and networking opportunities are offered. This “learning” component explores topics such as hospitality management, communication, human resource management, environmental sustainability, marketing, leadership, engineering and entertainment.

When most people first hear about the DCP, they picture the “earning” component. DCP participants work across 20 different roles in operations, entertainment, lodging, food and beverage, retail and recreation.

It’s easy to spew these facts when someone asks me about the DCP, and I do frequently, but the part that I love to talk about the most is the emotional impact that it has had on me. The DCP is really a once (or twice in my case and the case of many others) in a lifetime opportunity.

The hours may be long and the job may be stressful, but you truly learn more about yourself and the world during your time with the program. Learning to overcome obstacles, fostering new relationships, developing confidence in myself and my work ethic and making “magic” for millions of park guests are just a few of the lessons that I came home with.

I could not imagine a better work environment. The DCP challenged me to improve myself inside and out and offered me at least a world-class resume enhancer, and at its best a life-changing experience that I take joy in recommending to everyone I meet.

Omega Phi Alpha and Alpha Phi Omega.

Off-campus, one can serve at the Humane Society petting cats or walking dogs, helping out at The Cocoon or even drive up to Toledo to help at the food bank on the weekend.

Though you have to go through a training session to walk the dogs, the shelter really appreciates helping its furry friends receive some exercise. Petting the cats requires you to sign in with the shelter staff, but then you are free to pet the cats that they have available.

The Cocoon is a shelter here in Bowling Green for male and female victims of domestic abuse. Though their address is kept a secret to protect those who seek shelter there, you can always give them a call to speak to their volunteer coordinator to set up a time to serve. Can’t find time to get over to The Cocoon for a whole afternoon? They always appreciate donations such as food, clothing and other household goods.

There are a couple different food banks that you can lend your time to in Toledo, but I like to volunteer at the Northwestern Toledo Food Bank. You can do a variety of tasks, but it ultimately ends up depending on what they need done that particular day. You can sort newly donated food, help stack food on the floor so that it’s more organized and throw out expired food. You can either arrive with a group of friends or come solo to offer your time.

I believe doing service during your college years makes for a more rounded experience. Yes, it may be hard to get out there and get going, but the feeling you receive after you’ve helped someone is incredible.

The opportunities I named above are just a sample of what this campus and surrounding communities have to offer. If you participated in Dance Marathon, I hope you are inspired to keep serving and if you did not, I hope seeing the change your peers have made in kids’ lives inspires you to get out and help your campus and community.

Speaker: consumerism hurts feminism

Erika Heck

InFocus Editor

The University Culture Club brought co-founder of Bitch Media Andi Zeisler to the Ray Browne Conference as the Battleground States Keynote Address speaker on Saturday, where she warned the audience of the effect consumerism has on feminism.

Her presentation, "From Riot Grrrl to Marketplace Feminism," discussed how feminism in past years has not only become actions, but also an identity that has been adapted by popular culture and businesses.

"Feminism, just in the past couple of years, has become this identity that has really been taken on by Hollywood and by mainstream popular culture," she said. "And we see it increasingly as an identity that's filtered through images ... through Hollywood ... through advertising and through branding."

Zeisler found feminism in high school in New York City, studying visual art while working under women artists.

"They ... were very aware of the institutional sexism in the world of fine art, and so through them I was exposed to pop culture critique and response like this."

In the 80s, she said, people weren't interested in adopting the "feminist" label and it was often discussed as a "finite movement that had come and gone."

But now, growing up and coming to feminism at a time when people did not want to identify as such, Zeisler said it's indescribable how the evolution of feminism the past few years has a desirable identity. "It's been really gratifying to see feminism become a lens through which mainstream media increasingly looks at politics and pop culture and current events."

In some industries, such as the fashion designers, "feminism" has become a buzzword for a category of products.

"There's feminist jewelry, there's feminist underpants," she said. "In Sweden, there's a feminist energy drink."

She calls this "marketplace feminism," because it builds on the long history of advertising to women using the language of liberation.

"I see marketplace feminism simply

Hatch allows teams for first time

By Holly Shively

City Editor

Some University students are putting the final touches on their original business ideas to present for investors at The Hatch. This year's Hatch program will see several changes from previous years, affecting both the Hatchlings and audience.

The first of many changes comes in the form of a location move. While The Hatch has been held at the Stroh Center for the last three years, when the programs was born, this year's Hatch will be held in the Union Ballroom on Thursday, April 7 from 6-8 p.m.

Eleven Hatchlings, students participating in The Hatch, will present eight projects, narrowed down from the original 130 applicants. During Thursday's event, a panel of investors, as well as audience members, will listen to presentations from the Hatchlings, and if the investors choose to fund any of the projects, those funded Hatchlings will have the opportunity to start up their own company.

While there are 11 Hatchlings, there are only eight projects, as this is the first year teams have been allowed to enter The Hatch. Three teams qualified as finalists.

One team is comprised of University sophomores Collin Newton and Kiersten Castner. The two College of Business students are presenting "Trace Case," a phone case or wallet that stores credit and ID cards, keeping track of where and when the card was last removed from the case. The case also connects with an app that notifies the owners if their cards aren't returned to the case within a specific time period.

"The hardest thing was the communication aspect," Newton said about the team component. "We all need to figure out how that chain of communication works."

He said while communicating with Castner was no problem, sometimes their mentor or other important people were left out of the loop.

One facilitator the Hatchlings have been constantly in contact with is Kirk Kern, a University professor of entrepreneurship and director of the Dallas Hamilton Center. Kern founded The Hatch four years ago with Business College Dean, Ray Brown.

Both Brown and Kern have started their own companies and companies for others, "and now to be able to do that with a student, it's a dynamic opportunity," Kern said.

Part of Kern's responsibility in planning The Hatch is to build a 10-week "intensive immersion of entrepreneurship education" curriculum and match Hatchlings with a mentor.

"You hit almost every aspect of business in this process," Newton said about the 10-week training session.

Hatchling Ryan Murphy described the 10-week training as hectic with "lots of curve balls, lots of work and lots of learning. It's basically like a full time job."

Murphy and his partner Baqer Aljabr will present "The Park Shark Robot," an autonomous mobile surveillance and security robot. The project is a result of group think within Falcon Robotics, a campus club Murphy founded. The robot has the ability to ticket illegally parked cars and has video and audio surveillance.

Kern also holds independent studies with each Hatchling throughout the planning process. During these individual studies, Kern instructs on tasks at hand such as promotion, marketing or financials.

"People think it's about starting companies," Kern said. "It's really about educating young entrepreneurs how to think differently and to take an idea and get it ready for a presentation."

While planning The Hatch is a lot of work, Kern said it's not without its perks.

"It's so rewarding," he said. "I mean it's just incredibly, for me personally, just a wonderful opportunity to get one-on-one with a student but also to help them achieve their goal of potentially [launching] their own business at some point."

Castner said the planning process didn't come without difficulties.

"We're only sophomores and some other people in this program aren't even business students, so trying to figure out exactly how to do some of the things was definitely a challenge," she said.

Murphy found himself out of his comfort zone in a sense as well.

"Being an engineering technology major, it was a big shift to suddenly go to all this business stuff and all this business curriculum ... but seeing as our product is a robot it certainly helped out in designing that."

While any undergraduate student in any major can apply to be a Hatchling, Kern said the plan is to widen the scope of Hatchlings. This year, the first graduate student, Giuseppe Giamanco, is participating in the Hatch. The plan is to eventually open the program to BGSU faculty and staff as well doesn't matter if I'm dancing five, 25 or 47 hours. As long as it's for the kids, I'll be here."

Junior Megan Stahl, who was a first-time dancer this year, agreed with Legan, saying it didn't matter how many hours since it's for the kids. She didn't let the change in the hours affect her decision to sign up to dance.

"I had no idea they did the 32 hours last year, so learning about it this year and only having to do it for 24 hours, it felt relieving," Stahl said. "But either way I definitely would have done it."

Student wins title with talent

By JaLynn Dukes

Reporter

Every year, Sigma Phi Epsilon fraternity selects a female student at its annual philanthropy event to be the fraternity's Golden Heart; this year's Golden Heart won over the fraternity with a rather unusual talent.

"Golden Heart is a sort of competition we put on to raise money for our philanthropy, Big Brothers Big Sisters. It helps us support the organization, but also to find a new face to represent our fraternity," sophomore Jake Walters said.

A Sigma Phi Epsilon Golden Heart is described as a young woman who is the female face of the fraternity and helps with raising money for their organization and being supportive of the activities the fraternity partakes in.

On March 31, 10 women from different corners of the University community came out to try for the spot as the new Golden Heart. Each girl represented her organizations, as well as different cultures and age groups.

"There is an introduction round, a round where we ask questions about our chapter as well as Bowling Green, a talent round and then a round where we have the women tell us why they want to be our Golden Heart. From there, the judging panel selects who they think best fills that position," Walters said.

While there were many new faces trying for the place, one was particularly familiar.

Rachel Eichenauer, sophomore and intervention specialist major, went through the competition for the second year in a row.

Her first entry into the competition was spur of the moment, as was her talent.

"At the time, my sorority, Chi Omega, was at the union tables trying to get people to sign up for our event, Moonball. Sig Ep said if any of us signed up for their event, they would make a team for ours. I, along with some of my friends, decided to give it a try. I had loads of fun doing it last year and I was asked if I was going to do it this year so I decided to give it another try," said Eichenauer. "When I did the green bean juice, it was all in the moment. I heard someone in the crowd yell chug so I had to go for it," she said.

This year, though a variety of talents were performed, Eichenauer's caused the most uproar. She chugged a bottle of Red Hot hot sauce.

"When it came to the hot sauce, it was due to me trying to find something better than green bean juice. I've never tried to chug hot sauce before so I was really nervous about that," Eichenauer said.

Eichenauer had originally planned to eat 23 bags of donuts. Her purchased donuts were distributed to the crowd.

Eichenauer was crowned this year's Golden Heart for Sigma Phi Epsilon.

"It's really all about having fun. A lot of people think we are looking for someone to make us look good in every way but ... we want someone who is a passionate person and gets their schooling done while also enjoying themselves," Walters said.

"I wanted to win because they are great guys. Over the past few months I've gotten to know more of them and it's shown me a great side to fraternal life," she said.

While the entire fraternity does not vote for the winner, they showed a positive reaction to the crowning of this year's winner.

"A lot of us know her and so having her win was great. She gets along with all of us and I know she was doing good in that position," Walters said.

Eichenauer explained that she was most excited to be more involved with the chapter and getting to know all of the members individually.

"Being in a sorority, I have come to find what it's like to have a group of girls have your back, and doing this I will now be able to experience what it is like to have a group of men have my back," she said.

The title allows her to wear the Sigma Phi Epsilon letters, participate in their social events, join them for formal events and help them with philanthropy events.

"I can't wait to see how she prospers as our Golden Heart," Walters said. "I know she will do all that she can for us and that is always reassuring."

Falcons split against rival Toledo

By Zane Miller
Sports Reporter

The Falcons baseball team took two games out of three at home against the Toledo Rockets last weekend, losing the first game on Friday, 4-2, while sweeping a doubleheader on Sunday with a 5-3 win in the first game and a 7-3 victory in the second game.

"I thought we played good," Falcons head coach Danny Schmitz said. "Friday's game, we were right there, but we preach the three phases and at times we have mental lapses locating those three phases, but when we're focused and we do a good job and have those phases going, we're pretty competitive."

Friday's game began with the Falcons putting the first run on the board, with an RBI single from senior outfielder Matt Smith in the third inning giving the team a 1-0 advantage.

However, Toledo countered in the fourth inning by scoring a run off an error by the Falcons defense, tying the game 1-1. Toledo then went on to score twice in the sixth inning, getting one run on an RBI single and another on a bases loaded walk to make it a 3-1 game.

The Falcons scored again in the bottom of the inning on an RBI single from sophomore infielder Randy Righter to close the gap to 3-2, but the team would not score again with Toledo adding a run in the eighth for a 4-2 final score.

"We walked too many guys, we hit too many guys and obviously we're not scoring runs," Schmitz said. "We need to start scoring runs because the pitchers are starting to be too careful and they're nibbling versus attacking the zone because they're afraid to give up the big hit."

With the scheduled game on Saturday postponed due to rain, the teams played a Sunday doubleheader to close out the series. In the first game, it was Toledo who got off to a good start early, getting two runs in the first inning, but the Falcons scored two runs of their own in the second on a home run by sophomore infielder Cody Callaway, making it a 2-2 game.

Toledo regained the lead on a home run of their own in the fourth from Ryan Callahan for a 3-2 advantage, but the Falcons got three runs in the bottom of the inning, two from an RBI single by senior outfielder Kory Brown and one RBI single by Smith. The score would remain the same for the rest of the game, and the Falcons took a 5-3 win.

"The guys battled great," Schmitz said. "To have a come from behind victory, we tied the game up 2-2, and then they had a solo home run to make it 3-2, but then we battled back and scored the next three runs, so that was huge for us because we haven't had many come from behind victories."

"Believe it or not, it started with getting a sacrifice bunt down. That's a big key when you execute you have opportunities."

Game two would not feature any scoring until the fourth inning, when the Falcons offense exploded for seven runs. The scoring began with an RBI single from junior infielder Nick Glanzman, which was followed up by an RBI double from sophomore infielder Derek Drewes for a 2-0 advantage, setting up senior catcher Tyler Greiner to hit his first collegiate home run to score three runs, giving the Falcons a 5-0 lead. Smith followed it up with a homer of his own to score two and close out the inning with the Falcon lead of 7-0.

"Believe it or not, it started with getting a sacrifice bunt down," Schmitz said. "That's a big key when you execute, you have opportunities."

Toledo scored a run in the sixth and two more in the ninth, but could not overcome the large deficit as the Falcons won the Battle of I-75 series.

The team will play next on the road on Wednesday afternoon against the Michigan Wolverines.

Softball wins on the road

It was an eventful weekend for the BGSU softball team as it went 2-1 on the road against Mid-American Conference opponent Eastern Michigan. BG is now tied for fifth in the East Division with a 2-4 record against MAC opponents.

In the first game of Friday's doubleheader, both teams started off slow on the offensive end. The game picked up at the top of the fourth inning when senior Marisa Shook hit a RBI double to tie the game at one a piece.

Shook hit another RBI double towards center field to give BGSU a 2-1 lead in the top of the sixth inning.

Six Falcon hits and a number of errors by Eastern Michigan helped them score six runs in one inning to put the game out of reach for any Eagles comeback. BG won the first game 8-1.

In the second game of Friday's doubleheader, it was more of the same as the Falcons failed to score until the top of the fourth. With the bases loaded in the fourth, sophomore Morgan Evangelista was hit by a pitch giving her an RBI as BG evened the score at one a piece.

Sophomore Katee Hinkle added to the scoreboard with an RBI single toward right field giving BG a 2-1 in the top of the fourth inning. In the next inning, sophomore Chelsea Raker hit a home run to give the Falcons another run to push the lead to 3-1.

However, Eastern Michigan's offense came alive as they hit two home runs that would score three runs, cutting the deficit to 5-4. BG was still able to secure the win by holding off the Eagles run.

BGSU head coach Sarah Willis was satisfied with the team's well-balanced performance on Friday.

"Defensively, offensively and in the circle, it was great to see everyone on the same page. It's been a while since we all have played as a cohesive unit like that," Willis said.

Willis also commented on the performance of some of her players, especially Shook who went 5-for-7 and had 5 RBIs.

"It was great to see Shook have such a noteworthy day at the plate today," said Willis. "It was great to see her find her way back to where she started the season. She really picked up the team and was clutch all day."

On Saturday, Eastern Michigan struck first with a first inning home run to give them the early lead in the first inning.

BG responded quickly in the top of the second as senior Braiden Dillow hit a sacrifice fly toward left field to give her the RBI to tie the game at one a piece.

The pitching of the Falcons took a hit as they gave up five hits that resulted in Eastern Michigan getting three runs over the next two innings.

In the top of the fourth inning, Hinkle hit a single RBI toward center. The Falcons would still trail in the ball game as they were down 4-2.

BG couldn't match the offensive firepower that Eastern Michigan put on all game. The Eagles avoided the sweep by taking Saturday's game by a score of 8-2.

"We were not sharp today," Willis said. "We gave them too much in terms of physical errors and mental errors and our pitching was inconsistent today, and that consistency is something we're trying to work toward. We need to come out sharper next week."

The BGSU softball team will travel to Oxford, Ohio to take on Miami University in a Tuesday doubleheader starting at 3:00 p.m.

Tennis loses in the Battle of I-75

By Aidan Markey
Assistant Sports Editor

The BG womens tennis team fell to rival Toledo on the road Friday, 6-1, in an early-April Mid-American Conference matchup. While the final score might not show it, the Battle of I-75 was close and competitive all the way through.

Paula Comella and Drew Fillis picked up a doubles win for the Falcons, and the duo of Polina Radeva and Emily Witt lost a close doubles match to Toledo's Megan Miller and Lauren Thai, 6-4. The Rockets took the doubles point, though, thanks to a victory over Bowling Green's Leeah Floyd and Antonina Farrar.

"We let our nerves get the best of us, and we can't do that," head coach Olga Elkin said in reference to the Falcons losing the doubles point, which was the team's focus heading into the match. "We are young, and we will learn from that."

The Falcons saw more tight matches in the singles portion of the event. Elkin was not surprised with Bowling Green's competitive play in this portion, saying, "We were nice and focused going into the match."

To start singles, Comella took a commanding 6-1, 6-2 victory over UT's Sidnay Huck. Radeva then battled closely with the Rockets' Emily Mazzola, but was eventually defeated, 6-2, 2-6, 6-3.

Fillis fought tough in her match, falling in a slim margin to Toledo's Colleen O'Brien, 6-3, 7-6 (4). Witt also had a close match, although she was defeated by the Rockets' Miller, 6-2, 6-4.

With the loss, BGSU fell to 2-14 on the season, with a 0-3 record in the MAC. Toledo gained its first conference victory to become 1-2 in the MAC and 7-9 overall.

The Falcons will now face Eastern Michigan (3-13, 0-3 MAC) in their first home match since a narrow 4-3 loss against Chicago State Feb. 27. BG has lost its last four matches versus the Eagles, the most recent win being a 4-3 home victory in 2011.

The wins have not come easy for Eastern Michigan, though. Two of the four victories over the Falcons were by a 4-3 margin.

"It feels great getting back home for a match," Elkin said on the Falcons returning to campus. "We are hoping the weather holds up, and we can get outside at home."

Elkin also noted that the doubles point will be very significant for Bowling Green, just as it was heading into the Battle of I-75.

The Falcons' match against EMU is set for April 10 at 1 p.m.

because feminism itself has changed so much in just the past few decades," she said.

In the 90s, the "riot grrrl" was a subculture that came out of punk movements and pointed out the general lack of girl power from society. At the end of the decade, "girl power" was appropriated in the form of the Spice Girls.

"They were created to be a vehicle for dolls, backpacks and lunchboxes," Zeisler said, adding that their music became secondary to their marketing and merchandised products.

"In a way this ... marketing has really informed how marketplace feminism looks," she said. "Forty years ago ... there were no gendered earplugs .... Part of marketplace is not feminism at all in the sense that it's really biological essentialism dressed up as girl power."

She cautions that every feminism movement has the possibility to be taken over by both capitalism and consumerism.

Jenn Brandt, a 2007 masters alumna, has been teaching Andi Zeisler's work in her feminism and popular culture classes for the last 10 years.

Brandt graduated from the pop culture department and currently teaches at High Point University in North Carolina. This was the first time she has heard Zeisler's talk in person and though the talked reflected what she sees with her students.

"I see more media celebrities embracing the term, 'feminism,' which on one hand is great because it introduces students to a topic that they might not immediately gravitate toward," she said. "Feminism has become more an identity than a political activist movement."

Brandt wishes more people would have attended the speech.

"I think what she is saying is very important," she said. "It's a really great component of an excellent conference."

Race to raise mental illness awareness

By Holly Shively

City Editor

Some University students are looking to fight the stigma associated with mental health illness through a 5K run and walk this weekend.

Monday night at city council Rena Onady, president and founder of Active Minds, and Elizabeth Herring, President of the Undergraduate Psychology Association, invited Bowling Green community members and city officials to join University students and organizations on Sunday, April 10 at 11 a.m. at the Perry Field House for E-Race the Stigma.

The mission of Active Minds is to spread awareness of mental health in general and the stigma that goes along with mental illness.

"We really just want to let everyone know about their options," Onady said. "I think a lot of people experience this and they go through it alone because they really don't realize how many people go through this every day."

The Undergraduate Psychology Association is a professional organization to ready psychology majors and minors for the world after undergraduate graduations, whether that be preparation for graduate school or a career.

"This year we wanted to get a little bit more involved, a little bit more in activism and kind of getting our membership base working with the population they're interested in helping later in their careers," Herring said.

The idea for the 5K sprouted last year when the two organizations, along with To Write Lover on Her Arms and the University chapter of National Alliance on Mental Illness decided to start an event that would raise awareness for mental health and address the stigma. While trying to think of an event that would appeal to students and be informative, the group came up with a race.

While this is the event's first year, the organizations plan to make it an annual event.

At the race, different community and University organizations will be set up at tables with information to raise awareness about the stigma, symptoms, treatment and other mental health topics. There will also be fact signs to read throughout the event.

"We definitely wanted to be sure to give back to the community," Onady said.

To give back, the proceeds from the registration fee will be donated to the top three mental health organizations, voted on by participants. At the beginning of the event, each participant will be given an eraser, which they can use to vote for whichever organization they want the funds to go toward. The top three vote-getting organizations will receive donations.

The registration fee is $15 for a University student, $20 for University faculty and $25 for a participant with no University affiliations. Participants can register the day of the event for a flat $25, cash only. Since the event falls on Sibs and Kids Weekend, one child is permitted free of charge with each registration.

The first 100 participants will receive a free t-shirt, bandana and personal color packet. The race is also similar to a color run, where facilitators will be throwing color on the runners and walkers.

Municipal administrator Lori Tretter also discussed the police uniforms stolen from the dry cleaner over the weekend. She said the Bowling Green Police Division is looking into the theft. BGPD officers have identification, consisting of a large badge with an image of the police station. If citizens are concerned, they should check for this badge or call the station to ask dispatchers if the uniformed officer is legitimate.

"We definitely wanted to be sure to give back to the community."

"Every hatchling—anyone who gets in this program—is stellar," Kern said. "This is an exclusive group and it has been since we started it."

Each year, of the roughly eight to eleven projects selected, three or four typically get funded, depending on the quality of ideas and how those ideas align with the interests of the investors.

"Not everybody should get funded. We only want the best," Kern said.

He said while not every Hatchling will receive formal funding from the panel of investors, there could be an investor in the audience who would want to take on a Hatchling's project.

"One of our biggest hopes is to make our mentor proud," Newton said. "We're hoping the night of (The Hatch) to make him smile and get a pat on the back."

Newton and Castner's mentor, Paul Hooker, has had a lot of success, having all three of his previous Hatchlings receive funding during The Hatch.

"Those are some big shoes to fill," Castner said.

Another new addition to this year's event is the Hatch Spotlight. At the Spotlight, past Hatchlings will be available for attendants to visit and possibly buy their Hatch products in the Lobby area outside the Ballroom.

While tickets to The Hatch main event and The Hatch Watch Party in Olscamp are sold out, the event can also be live streamed from anywhere in the world, and Murphy encourages students to hold their own watch parties.

"We encourage people to show up and just have a great time, and of course support these students," Kern said.
